

the colleges prevented a clause being adopted which would preclude the association in games of college players with professionals.

Bicycle riders who compete in six-day races are planning to form a union, affiliate with the American Federation of Labor and fight the National Cycling ass'n, the governing body of the bike sport. This is one development of the effort of Packey McFarland and a syndicate of Chicagoans to buck the Cycling Federation with an outlaw six-day race. Packey's position became so strong, when riders flocked to his banner, that the federation agreed to give him a franchise for holding a race here, providing the federation got a portion of the gate receipts. No

Frankie Whitney, the Carpenter-fighter.